

Markov Decision Process Models

Invent a simple Markov Decision Process Model with the following properties: a) it has a goal state, b) its immediate action costs are all negative, c) all of its actions can result with some probability in the start state, and d) the optimal policy without discounting differs from the optimal policy with discounting and a discount factor of 0.9. Prove d) using value-iteration.